

VITAMIN A AND PREGNANCY

It is important to understand the following facts about vitamin A and pregnancy, as this can be a concern for many clients:

- When looking at how vitamin A works in the skin, it is important to know that once vitamin A is absorbed, it is trapped in the skin.
- Humans do not have the enzyme systems to transfer vitamin A from the skin into the bloodstream.
- High levels of vitamin A in the skin cannot cause liver damage, interfere with the development of a foetus or other complications.
- Environ believes that their products containing vitamin A are safe during both pregnancy and lactation.
- It is important to remember that during pregnancy, the skin's response to cosmetics may temporarily be changed and therefore, should the client wish to continue using Environ, we advise the use of lower levels of vitamin A or discontinuing the use of vitamin A if the skin is too sensitive, especially during the first trimester.
- The client should start at a low dose of vitamin A when re-instituting it again, after the first three months of pregnancy.
